EPM will withdraw the Agreement 267 Project that was used to strengthen the company position when facing the eventual sale of Isagen

- EPM reiterated that they still have a good relationship with the National Government, majority shareholder of Isagen
- The Agreement Project was made to protect the public property the company has in the electric energy generator

The General Manager of EPM and leader of EPM Group, Juan Esteban Calle Restrepo, announced this Tuesday that the company will withdraw the 2014 Agreement 267 Project that was carried out in the Counsel of Medellín so that the Corporation can authorize conductive measures to protect the public property that represents 13% of the shares that the company has in Isagen.

EPM's decision came after the Minister of the Internal Revenue Service and Public Credit [Hacienda y Crédito Público], Mauricio Cárdenas Santamaría, indicated the Government's plan to extend the transfer of the Nation's title in Isagen, per request of the proposers interested in the public bid that was planned for August 22. EPM respects the National Government's decision about this.

"We have always felt very comfortable with the way the National Government has treated us at Isagen," commented Calle Restrepo about the National Government's decision to allow him to continue being a minority shareholder with guarantees and to keep his position at the Generator's Board of Directors for one more year.

The Agreement 267 Project wanted to value and strengthen the position of EPM as a minority shareholder at the generator company, before the possible arrival of a new controlling shareholder, always thinking about the defense and protection of public property.
